I. MARKET & MACRO-ECONOMICS REVIEW

◆ THE WORLD

The global economy continues to move sideways in 2025, growth is projected to decelerate in 2026 due to:

- Escalating geopolitical conflicts and protectionism (US tariffs, trade fragmentation)
- The Iranian conflict is projected to heighten inflationary pressures, limiting the scope for interest rate cuts across most economies
- Global tech decoupling accelerating China+1 FDI shift — a tailwind for Vietnam

I. MARKET & MACRO-ECONOMICS REVIEW

VIETNAM REAL ESTATE MARKET (HIGH RISE)

◆ Supply

- Affordable housing supply dried up; high-end segment dominates both markets.
- Hung Yen (Hanoi satellite) sees a high-end supply boom (98% share).
- Binh Duong & Long An (HCMC satellites) show strong growth across both mid-end and high-end segments

◆ Demand

- Healthy Absorption: Absorption rates remain stable across both major markets despite price fluctuations.
- Shift to Peripheral Areas: Driven by rising prices in HCMC, capital is increasingly shifting toward investment opportunities in surrounding provinces

➔ As core-city prices rise, high-rise demand is shifting to satellite provinces - driving the next wave of real estate growth.

(1): HCMC before the merge province

(2): Absorption rate: is the rate calculated throughout the market, including the number of units sold from new projects in the quarter and the launch periods from previous old projects.

I. MARKET & MACRO-ECONOMICS REVIEW

VIETNAM REAL ESTATE MARKET (LOW RISE)

• Supply

- While showing a contraction compared to the 2022 peak, Hanoi's new supply remains resilient and aligns with the 5-year historical average
- HCMC is projected to see a significant surge in new supply by 2025, primarily anchored by the Vinhomes Can Gio mega-project.
- Developers pivoting toward integrated township models in satellite areas

• Demand

- Strong demand for integrated townships and reputable developers keeps absorption rates healthy.
- Buyers are increasingly discerning, showing a strong preference for projects developed by reputable firms with transparent legal status and comprehensive amenities.

➡ In the low-rise segment, buyers demand trust and scale, favoring integrated townships from legally transparent developers with proven execution.
